SCHOOL FOR GAMBLERS.

It really is a great pity that some arrangement cannot be made to have the crooked gambling devices taken from the Gladstone hotel on Thursday kept permanently on exhibition in Salt Lake for the benefit of the ingenious youth and older men who believe that an outsider really has some small fraction of a chance to beat a gambler at his own game.

Faro and roulette are easily the two most popular of all gambling games. The former appeals more to the professional, and because of its less overpowering advantage against the player, it is also more popular with the "wise" man who has acquired a few elementary facts regarding systems, but is still weak enough to believe that a mysterious good fortune which he doesn't expect to act for him in any other phase of life will bring him wealth from the owner of the bank despite all the latter's known advantages and percentage of chance in his favor. Roulette is not so complicated as faro. It has more devotees, and they all are losers, for the percentage in favor of the bank is greater even than in the case of faro.

Some gambling-house proprietors are not satisfied with the advantage that a longer purse and the percentage of the game in their favor give them over the callow youth or the half-drunken and wholly foolish man who plays at their tables. For such proprietors as these appliances like those at police headquarters are manufactured. They eliminate entirely the law of chance. Unless the dealer so decide, the player may never win a single bet. Ultimately the player must lose every dollar he hazards. The crooked layouts at the police station are for faro and roulette. The mechanism for the faro table was described in yesterday's Herald. Its use enables the dealer to change the order of cards in the box after the bets are made on the table. The roulette table's results are governed by the slight pressure on the cash drawer which, by an ingenious mechanical contrivance, forces the whirling ivory ball to drop almost instantly when desired.

Experienced detectives assert that nearly all gambling tables are fixed for crooked work. That all proprietors do not avail themselves of the opportunity for fraud is due to the moral view of the man. Some are satisfied with the certainty of profit that any game of chance affords the house. Others, too cowardly to be burglars or hold-ups and greedy for all in sight, rob with crooked games.

The law makes gambling a felony; using dishonest appliances adds nothing to the legal guilt of the gambler, and this is unfortunate, for so long as men are constituted as they are they will gamble.

But the pity of it is that every young man in Salt Lake cannot see the tables at headquarters. No person who has seen them and how easily they can be operated is likely to wager much money in a gambling-house, be its reputation good or bad.

ANGRY AT THEIR CZAR.

Great uneasiness is being manifested among Republican congressmen about the effect of Speaker Cannon's legislative tactics upon the fall elections. The opinion is quite generally held at Washington that the speaker has only to persist in the course upon which he has embarked in order to make certain the election of a Democratic house. Congressmen in close, doubtful districts are particularly worried, and for this reason many of them are openly in insurrection against Cannon's policy.

A few days ago the New York Times contained an account of the way in which the speaker has conducted legislation all by himself throughout the session, passing bills or killing them in opposition, not merely to the Democrats, but to his own party. No speaker in history has ever exercised power in the despotic way in which Mr. Cannon exercises it. Prior to Reed's time no speaker had the power, but neither Reed nor Henderson ever made such use of their office as Cannon has.

But this is not what worries the insurgent congressmen. They relied upon legislation in this session to help them, but say that the bills which the speaker in defiance of the house and his party has picked out for slaughter have been those that they relied upon most for influence with their constituents. Congressmen have pleaded with the speaker, telling him that they are doomed to defeat unless these bills are passed, but the speaker has brusquely turned them down.

In summing up the meaning and effect of a number of instances of arbitrary overruling the sentiment of his party, the Times says that the speaker has ruled as Reed and Henderson never dreamed of ruling. He has been the sole legislator of the lower branch. He has conducted legislation against the will of his own party, which neither Reed, Henderson nor any other speaker had ever done. The bills which he has strangled, and which his own party was vehemently zealous to pass, were almost all bills either in the interest of labor organizations, bills aimed at curbing the power of corporations or bills designed to end frauds and bad commercial practices. He has done this over the protest of the men who will come up for re-election this fall, and there is a deep-rooted conviction in the Republican cloakrooms that, if the Democrats win the house, the chief architect of that result will be Speaker Cannon.

EXTRAVAGANT DIPLOMATS.

Congressman Sherley of Kentucky took occasion the other day during a house discussion of the diplomatic and consular bill to denounce the "wasteful extravagance, the outrageous and un-American method of living, of some of our representatives abroad." Mr. Sherley mentioned our ambassador to the court of St. James, Mr. Reid, who pays $40,000 a year as rent for his residence. The Kentuckian contended that Reid "was not representing, but misrepresenting, the country that honors him."

Further along in his remarks Mr. Sherley spoke of the dignity that should be maintained by Americans who are accredited to foreign countries. He said they needed a proper place in which to dwell, "a decent living, an opportunity to entertain properly the representatives of other governments and American citizens who may be abroad, but that dignity is violated the moment you step across the line and get into display and ostentation. I would like to see some man who vulgarly, snobbishly is flaunting his money in the face of the world called home because of that fact, and because it is undemocratic and not in keeping with the spirit of our people."

There is a lot of sound sense in all this. The Herald has frequently spoken of the abuses in our diplomatic service, and of the recognized fact that none but the very rich need apply for important embassies. It is quite true that a man may be very able and very rich at the same time, but it is also true that many able men are kept out of the service because they are not rich. Our ambassadors are not paid anything like the salaries paid to representatives of important foreign nations in this country, and they do not have the allowances for entertainment and other necessary expenses. They should be paid more money, and they should have proper houses in which to live. These houses should be paid for by the government, which would put all of our representatives on the same footing, and there would be no necessity for any man to hesitate about entering the service because of the question of means.

A 12-year-old boy in Vienna committed 153 thefts before he was discovered. Had he been in America instead of Austria he probably would have made a joint stock company and told the truth when investigated, so that he might receive the immunity bath.

It was a frank witness who, at the Pennsylvania railroad inquiry, testified: "If there was money to be given out I was there to take it." A lot of other Pennsylvania officials seem to have been there for the same identical purpose.

Iowa Republicans of the First congressional district in the Hawkeye state have ditched Hedge. Obscurity is waiting for many of the subservient yokel congressmen who are content to blindly follow Cannon, Grosvenor and Dalzell.

America may be losing her meat market abroad but the country is still safe. Mrs. Bradley Martin appeared at the British court a week ago in "a magnificent blue dress with gorgeous jewels."

It is said that Mr. Booth, appointed by President Roosevelt to the district attorneyship for Utah, is as good as any other Republican. Let it go at that.

Washington Post: In other words, the committee on privileges and elections is of the opinion that Mr. Smoot should be declared out and Mr. Burton should be fired out.

Roosevelt has written his opinion of several noted American statesmen. The verdict of posterity on Roosevelt would be mighty interesting reading just now.

Captain Wynne of the naval department seems to have been brought up on the Roosevelt brand of soothing syrup. He wouldn't listen to admonition.

That packing house report is enough to make even a goat shy about eating the canned corned beef labels.

It is a reasonably sure bet that congress will be glad when the president adjourns for this term.

The Washington Post rises to remark that the Spanish royal wedding, after all, was a bomb affair.

You haven't heard any local packer kick about the Chicago report, have you?
